Flora florals is a design studio company. I love how the navigation is very clean and her social media icons are at the top. You can tell that one of targets is to connect and show her portfolio. Also, that she big on social media as heavy promotion. It gives a very encouraging way to tell a user to share your experience on socials and to tag us. I think it has a good concept to incorporate in my site because as a community garden it is necessary to be promoted by local, personal experience, for our community. I love the slides show to give a straightforward introduction to the work.

Civic conservatives greater Cincinnati is my competition site. I love the floral backgrounds for text sites something I envisioned on my personal site. The rounded social icons are a nice touch and puffy so there are noticeable. A couple things I don't like is the navigation bar wraps. Also, the footer has a lot of content I feel should be shown higher on the site. The body of the filter quick links being orange doesn't sit well with my eyes after a while a little too noisy. Also, the font compliments the rounded elements, but it is a very childish / over used font. It's like one of the very first fonts listed in word. Otherwise, the site is straight forward.

My third site is the Cincinnati Zoo website. A couple features that I love is that the site is interactive. As you scroll more content appears. Something I will incorporate with my site. The site is left aligned but have garden content page that is sticky and is always feeling the right margin which is a nice feature for filler pages that have obsessive information. I also like the graphic texture on the right as well as the funny border for the footer. It gives the site character and makes it fun instead of snobby.
